BOMBED KUT

Turk Airmen Attack
Aylmer Trying to Advance

London, March 24.—(U.)—A relief expedition is apparently harassing the enemy in an effort to reach Col. Townsend at Kuirdi. A Constantinople official communication states:

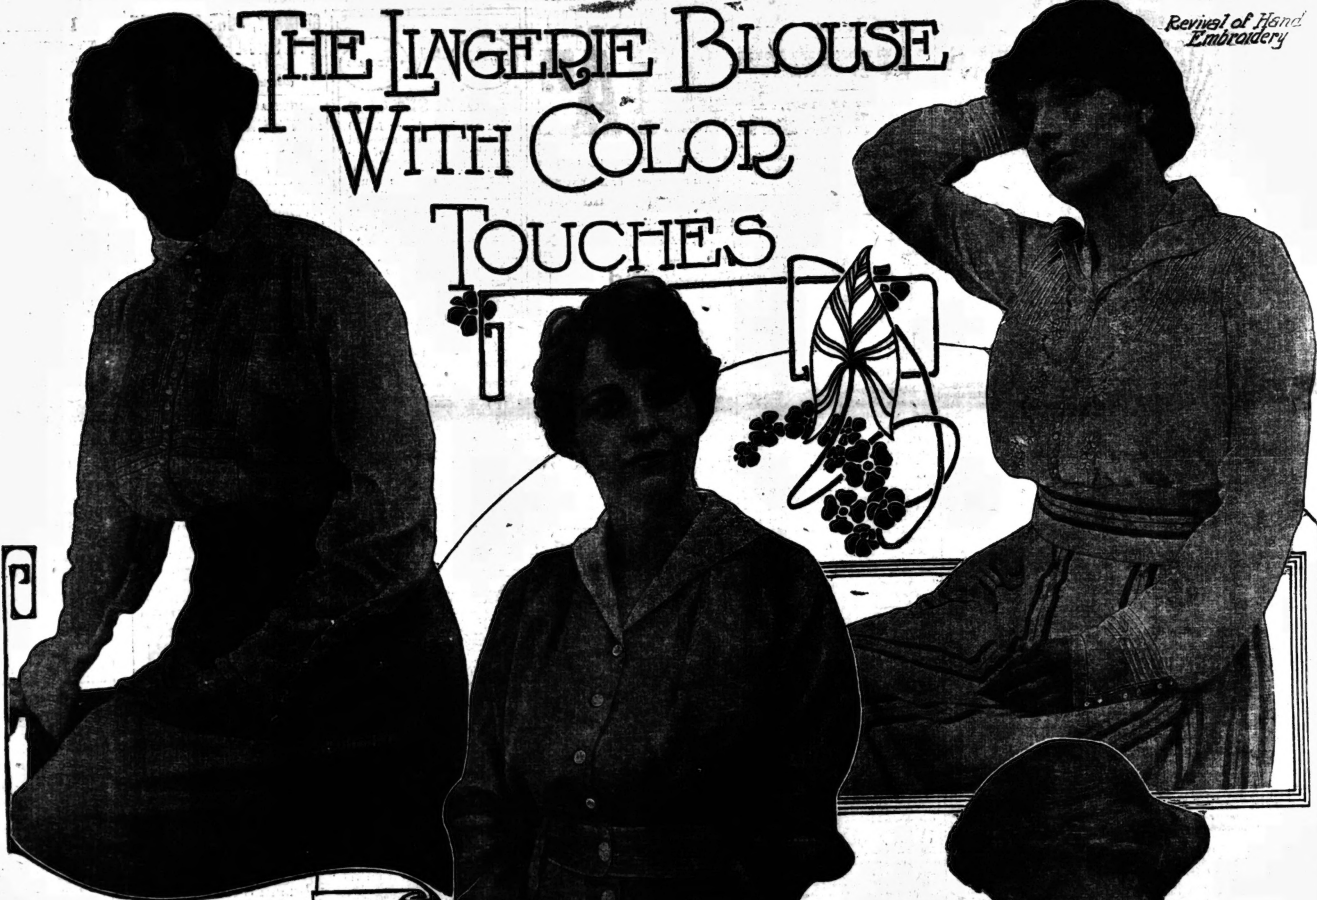

"On the Irak front, near Faidan, the enemy force of about two battalions attacked our advance posts on the right bank of the Tigris, but was repulsed after an hour's fighting. On the night of March 23, our armoured cars and tanks attacked the enemy at Amara. The same night one of our seaplanes bombarded hostile ships anchored in Kepalos Bay. Our troops, we observed that all our operations were effective."

CAN THE WOMEN VOTE

Chicago, March 24.—An incident which has been placed on its feet by Mr. J. G. Thompson, publisher of the Chicago Tribune, has been the subject of a letter from the United States Supreme Court.

Sound, queer, but true. The people can flatter others who flatter themselves that, they can,

THE LINGERIE BLOUSE WITH COLOR TOUCHES

Revival of Hand Embroidery

IT IS a decided fact that a woman's interest in blouses never wanes. Perhaps this is because designers are ever offering something new. This season a cheerful note has been sounded—that of vivid coloring. The wildest combinations are seen, and yet the result is harmonious.

The blouse made along plain lines is an example of the unusual color combination. The blouse itself is of orange handkerchief linen, while the collar and lower section of the cuffs are of lavender linen. By the way, handkerchief linen is quite a favorite material for lingerie blouses, and it is offered in plain colors, stripes and checks.

Since stripes bid fair to be well-liked this season, it behooves the smartly-dressed woman to include one striped blouse in her wardrobe. A pink-and-white candy stripe, like the one shown, is very stunning. The pique collar and cuffs add to its immaculate pink-and-whiteness.

The white blouse showing green linen piping along the tucks on the front and sleeves would be charming to wear with a green coat suit. The odd use of green linen on the collar adds character to the model. The buttons and buttonholes are merely decorative and are not intended to be useful.

Here you are, girls, if you're looking for a mannish type of blouse. The one with the shirt-front effect is just the thing. However, the blue-and-white combination reserves a feminine touch of daintiness. The blue part of the blouse is of marquisette—a material which has been restored to popularity. The tucked section and the collar are of fine white handkerchief linen. White crochet buttons ornament the front pleat and hold down the tucks taken in the sleeve to form a fitted-cuff effect. Hemstitching has been used to good advantage to trim the blouse.

There has been a revival of hand embroidery on blouses. The application of the handwork is more artistically applied than heretofore. On the blouse of sheer white lawn eyelets and solid stitches are used to bring out the beauty of the sprays on either side of the front pleat. Old-rose marquisette has been used to trim the collar and cuffs. It also forms a background for the white buttons.

Don't lose sight of the fact that all of these blouses except one feature low collars. This note will be appreciated more highly as the warm weather advances.
